What a busy year 2019 was! The 92nd General Assembly dominated between January and April, with more than 1,091 bills passed. Working with our partners and coalitions, Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families (AACF) helped introduce 12 bills from our 2019 legislative agenda. We testified before legislative committees, and we hosted 140 child advocates at our Kids Count Day at the Capitol. Our governmental affairs director and policy staff spent hours working with legislators and our partners to help gain the passage of laws that will make real improvements in kids’ lives. We are especially proud of the gains made in juvenile justice reform and in school discipline practices.

Of course, the legislative session wasn’t the only action we saw last year. As you’ll read in the following section, we have turned our attention to putting racial equity at the center of all our work at AACF. We are identifying racial disparities in our state and surfacing solutions to help improve the lives of every child in Arkansas. It’s important to us that we bring our supporters along with us on this journey, so I hope you’ll spend some time on those pages.

We spent a great deal of time advocating against the Arkansas Works (the state’s Medicaid expansion program) work-reporting requirement, and we were pleased when the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia ruled that the work-reporting requirement violated the purpose of the Arkansas Works program and a federal appeals court panel upheld that decision. We will, of course, actively monitor future court appeals and any other threats to our state’s Medicaid programs, which provide health coverage to hundreds of thousands of Arkansans.

In 2019 we dedicated a lot of effort toward examining the health and other benefits that would come from enacting a state-level Earned Income Tax Credit, as well as exploring ways to encourage Arkansas to adopt this important anti-poverty measure.

Last year we expanded our team to add two new positions: a Northwest Arkansas development director and a racial equity director for advocacy. Our team spent the year growing together, learning each other’s skills and strengths, and I’m looking forward to seeing the progress we make toward improving the lives of Arkansas’s children and families.

Of course, none of our work would be possible without the support of our donors and funders. If you donated in 2019, we thank you graciously, and we hope you will continue supporting us. If you are new to the organization, I hope this annual report will inspire you to help us be a strong voice for Arkansas’s children and families.

Rich Huddleston
At the end of 2018, the AACF board adopted a new strategic plan, making racial equity a top priority for the organization. In 2019, we took two significant steps to best position ourselves to take on this work.

We engaged a consultant agency, OpenSource Leadership Strategies, to help us go deeper on equity in our work.

We received essential feedback from 16 external partners and funders to help us identify opportunities to more fully integrate racial equity into our work.

We participated in a series of staff trainings to explore how AACF should think about equity in both our external and internal work and how individual staff should undertake their own personal journeys on equity.

Our executive director and deputy director received coaching on how to manage the organization’s equity work.

We identified initial goals and action steps for future equity work in the areas of policy, communications and engagement, development, and internal culture and management practices.

And we raised new funding to hire a race equity director for advocacy. AACF is one of the first state-level groups in two of our most important national networks — the State Policy Priorities Partnership and the Partnership for America’s Children — to create a dedicated staff position focused on advancing equity within the organization and our external work.
Why Does Racial Equity Matter to AACF?

We have always been focused on the well-being of children in Arkansas. But research and experience tell us that children of color face more historical and structural obstacles to reaching their full potential. Our state cannot reach its potential while so many children are left behind. Racial inequity is a solvable problem, and we will use our current and expanding abilities to be part of the solution.

What Does Our Racial Equity Work Look Like?

We are identifying racial and ethnic disparities in child well-being and sharing solutions grounded in the historical and current circumstances that created those disparities. And we are scrutinizing the impact of structural racism on all legal and policy decisions regarding the approval and use of available public funds.

You will increasingly see data from our organization presented in a way that highlights how, when and where policies, programs and proposals negatively affect or disproportionately disadvantage children and families along racial and ethnic lines.

Melvin Clayton (pictured above right) joined AACF as race equity director for advocacy in October 2019. Melvin is a graduate of the University of Arkansas at Pine Bluff and the University of Arkansas Clinton School of Public Service. He brings a unique blend of experience working on social justice issues and conducting public engagement with diverse stakeholders at the grasstops and grassroots levels.

In January 2019, Missy Darwin Kincaid joined AACF as our first-ever Northwest Arkansas development director. After 10 years with a presence in NWA, AACF was ready for this next step, and Missy was the right person for the job.

In June, Fran Carter joined the team in Little Rock as the new development director.

Both Missy and Fran have extensive experience in successful nonprofit fundraising. Missy was most recently vice president of development at Walton Arts Center, where she worked for 18 years. Fran was director of development for Arkansas Repertory Theatre for the last decade.

What’s more, Fran and Missy have known each other since they were kids. They both grew up in Little Rock and graduated from Central High School!

Fran and Missy are glad to be working with donors who want to support such an important mission.

Fran (pictured below at left): “Every day, we are learning about the important advocacy work this organization does to help children and low-income families.”

Missy (pictured below at right): “We work with an amazing team, and we’re glad to be part of this vital team effort to make Arkansas a better place for children and families to live. It’s exciting to work for an organization that makes such an impact on the lives of children and families. I’m proud to be a part of this vital team of passionate individuals, and grateful that funders in Arkansas and nationally recognize the importance of our work.”

YOUR SUPPORT MATTERS

Annual unrestricted funding gives AACF the flexibility to work on new and emerging issues as they arise. It also provides more resources for building coalitions, hosting outreach events around the state to recruit new advocates, and lobbying on behalf of children at the state capitol.

Your support positions us to be even more effective advocates for Arkansas’s families.
Laws reflect the opinions and wishes of the people who show up. At Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families, we are dedicated to increasing the number of child advocates who are following legislation and policies, contacting their elected officials, and going to the Capitol, so state laws better reflect the interests of Arkansas kids.

Strong partnerships are critical to our work at the Capitol. Through coalitions, we activated our networks in 2019 to protect low-income children and families from efforts to roll back laws that increased incomes and provided a critical safety net.

During the legislative session in 2019, we increased the number of people calling and writing legislators. Through email blasts and social media, AACF quadrupled the number of advocates responding to action alerts from the 2017 legislative year, meaning legislators were hearing from more advocates on how proposed bills would impact the children of our state.

In 2019, the Arkansas Kids Count Coalition, staffed by AACF Community Engagement Director Rebecca Zimmermann (pictured above, standing), hosted 18 events, with 470 participants. In Little Rock, Springdale, Bentonville, Fort Smith, Jonesboro, Helena, El Dorado, Texarkana, Cherokee Village, Hot Springs, and Russellville, we talked about what happened during the General Assembly, issues advocates are seeing in their local communities, and how to advocate.

AACF leads workshops on how to advocate. If you would like to schedule a training for your group or organization, please call 501-371-9678.

As we look to the 2021 legislative session, we hope you will join us as a voice for kids.
2019 HIGHLIGHTS & ACCOMPLISHMENTS

HEALTH: KEEPING ARKANSANS COVERED

More than 425,000 children in Arkansas benefited from ARKids First coverage during 2019. Over the past several years, Arkansas has seen an overall increase in the number of uninsured children and a decrease in the number of eligible children enrolled in Medicaid. Our outreach efforts have, therefore, been focused specifically on reversing these trends.

In 2019, we tirelessly advocated against the Arkansas Works work-reporting requirement, which was stopped by a U.S. District Court ruling in March 2019. To date, all subsequent appeals of that ruling have been denied. We remain vigilant against any further threats to coverage and access to health services through Medicaid, ARKids First, Arkansas Works, and the Affordable Care Act.

EDUCATION: PROMOTING EDUCATION EQUITY AND RESEARCH-BASED PRACTICES

We played a role in the passage of Act 557, which bans the use of corporal punishment for many special education students in Arkansas’s public schools. And we were part of a coalition that helped defeat two major voucher bills that would have diverted public tax dollars from public to private schools.

We worked with our early childhood education partners to develop and advocate for the creation of a refundable personal income tax credit for early childhood educators. The legislation passed the Senate but did not make it out of the House. We will continue this work in 2020 and into the 2021 legislative session.

For the first time, AACF became involved in local education advocacy work in the Little Rock School District, which remains under state control and which serves many low-income students and students of color. What happens in the LRSD has important implications across the state, and AACF advocated for returning the district back to local control and creating community schools — a research-based strategy shown to improve equity and outcomes for students.
Juvenile Justice: A Milestone Year

The Arkansas legislature passed Act 189, comprehensive juvenile justice reform legislation; AACF worked with Governor Hutchinson’s administration, the Division of Youth Services, juvenile judges, service providers and advocates to help develop and pass this piece of legislation.

Act 189 Goals

- Reduce the number of juveniles in secure confinement and shorten their length of stay in secure confinement
- Redirect funding from secure confinement to more effective community-based programs
- Improve accountability in the juvenile justice system
- Improve equity in the allocation of services throughout the state

AACF also advocated for the passage of Act 971, which placed major limits on the use of isolation or solitary confinement for juveniles in juvenile detention or state correctional facilities. The bill is based on well-documented research that juvenile detention or solitary confinement, especially for long periods of time, is bad for the well-being of kids.

Tax and Budget + Economic Security: Moving the Conversation Along

AACF worked successfully to minimize the revenue impact of the personal income tax cut that passed in the 2019 session. While the tax cut that passed still almost exclusively benefited higher-income earners, the amount of revenue lost is projected to be closer to $100 million than the original $200 million price tag associated with the original tax cut plan.

While it did not become law, legislation creating a refundable Earned Income Tax Credit on the state-level made it farther through the legislative process than it has in the past.

Legislators from both parties and both chambers sponsored the legislation, which made it through the full Senate before time constraints caused it to die on the House side. This is partially because of the work AACF did in conjunction with Children’s HealthWatch and Arkansas Children’s Hospital, conducting a Health Impact Assessment on a potential state-EITC in Arkansas.

AACF Senior Policy Analyst Bruno Showers (pictured below) spoke to reporters and the public at a press conference about the potential impact of large personal income tax cuts.
2019 HIGHLIGHTS & ACCOMPLISHMENTS

CENSUS: COUNTING ALL OF ARKANSAS’S KIDS

An accurate Census count in 2020 is critical to the wellbeing of children around the country, including here in Arkansas. In 2019, AACF, as part of the Arkansas Counts advisory group, worked with grassroots organizations and foundations to increase the likelihood of a complete count of people who have in the past been undercounted, including people who have immigrated to the U.S., people of color, and people living in rural areas. We also worked to raise awareness of the young child undercount with teachers, physicians, and others who work with young children by creating a communications toolkit and giving presentations on the issue.

PROGRESS IN NWA

We were thrilled to grow our Northwest Arkansas office in 2019. Missy Darwin Kincaid joined our staff as our first Northwest Arkansas development director, bringing both fundraising and policy experience to the staff in our Springdale office.

In 2019, we joined our partners at Arkansas United and Arkansas Coalition of Marshallese in advocating for new laws that help immigrants in Northwest Arkansas reach their full potential, the culmination of more than a decade of advocacy for a state-level “Dream Act” that extends access to in-state college tuition to many immigrants and migrants.

While our work in Northwest Arkansas covers the whole range of AACF’s issues, the office continues to place a special emphasis on addressing the unique challenges and obstacles faced by children in immigrant families. From early childhood education to a better foster care system, we’re working to show decision makers in the region how sound public policy can create opportunities for all children.

COMMUNICATIONS

In 2019, AACF published 71 blog posts, sent 33 press releases, hosted eight Facebook live videos, created 13 social media videos, and launched a digital campaign promoting enrollment in Arkansas Works.

Our staff and communications products were mentioned in local, statewide, national and even international media more than 250 times in 2019.

PUBLICATIONS

As part of our effort to get more people advocating for children at the Capitol, Arkansas Advocates published 10 Types of Advocacy, a simple guide that reviews different methods of advocacy, like social media, legislative, and administrative. It also includes an advocacy plan template. You can find this guidebook and more at aradvocates.org/publications
COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

AACF was thrilled to be presented with Pulaski County Youth Services’ Visionary Award at their 2019 Champions of Youth Luncheon.

We honored Antwan Phillips, First Lady Susan Hutchinson and Kathy Webb at the 2019 Friends of Children Annual Luncheon.
